This means that the FRBNY has access to the Mexican oil proceeds and can use them to reimburse the United States for any amounts it had paid out on its guarantee, plus interest.

DEATH OF RICHARD L. ROUDEBUSH

Mr. COATS. Mr. President, the world lost a great public servant and well-known Hoosier last weekend with the death of the Honorable Richard L. Roudebush.

He was born on a farm in Noblesville, IN, 77 years ago. In 1941, he graduated from Butler University in Indianapolis with a degree in business administration. Soon after, he enlisted on the Army just 1 month before the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor and was shipped out to Egypt in September 1942, where he joined with British Forces during five major battles in North Africa. While participating in the invasion of Italy, his landing craft was hit and was sunk by the enemy, but he survived and continued the fight with the 15th Air Force.

Richard Roudebush's distinguished career of serving United States does not end with his role in World War II. He demonstrated his leadership among his war veteran peers with being actively involved in the Indiana Department of Veterans of Foreign Wars and eventually being elected as national commander in chief of the national VFW.

A friend of Mr. Roudebush's remarked that he was so discouraged at the way Hoosier Congressmen were handling things in Washington, that he decided to run for Congress himself. He did, and in fact, he was elected to the House of Representatives five times, and from three different districts. Through his own efforts, he quickly rose from the ranks to become the assistant minority whip and ranking member of his party on the Committee on Science and Astronautics where he was best known for his instrumental efforts in helping to get America's space program successfully off the ground.

No challenge was ever too great for Richard Roudebush. This was most apparent in the contest for the Senate seat of then-Senator Vance Hartke. Mr. Roudebush did not win the race, but it was the closest Senate election race in Indiana history. Out of 2 million votes cast only 4,000 votes kept him from victory.

His deep affection and commitment to his fellow veterans led him on a continued mission, especially after his congressional days, to help make better the lives of his fellow comrades. After working in the Veterans Administration for 3 years as the No. 3 man, President Gerald Ford nominated Mr. Roudebush as Veterans Administrator in 1974. His dedication to veterans continued later in life as he served on veteran advisory boards and was honored with life membership to most veteran-related organizations.

Richard Roudebush fought for United States and served his country in the public sector as representative of the people. He was a Hoosier hero who exemplified the very best in public service. His vision, knowledge, and zeal for excellence, and determination to see initiatives through to their successful conclusion are some of his qualities that have endured in the Veterans Administration and the Congress. His honors and awards are a treatment to the depth of his service dedication and the impact of his efforts. His presence will be greatly missed, but his work on behalf of veterans and the residents of Indiana will remain a great legacy of which all Americans can be proud.

RECOGNIZING THE 200TH BIRTHDAY OF THE U.S. NAVY SUPPLY CORPS

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I rise today to recognize the more than 5,000 men and women of the U.S. Navy Supply Corps, active and reserve, who on February 23, 1995, will celebrate the 200th birthday of their distinguished service to our Nation and Navy. The naval officers who proudly wear the Supply Corps oak leaf are the business managers of the Navy and are responsible for the logistics support of operating forces in the fleet and naval shore installations worldwide.

The Supply Corps has come a long way since its birth in 1795, when Teach Francis of Philadelphia took the helm as the first Purveyor of Public Supplies. The original charter of the Supply Corps was to support the six wooden frigates of a young American Navy. The Supply Corps has distinguished itself throughout its long history by ensuring that the United States has been ready to defend American freedom and interests in every conflict since the War of 1812. Its responsibilities have grown tremendously and have kept pace with the challenge of providing logistics support to a modern and highly technological Navy, which has grown in size and complexity. Today, the Navy Supply Corps employs the latest technologies and management skills to supply our Navy at the lowest possible cost and with the greatest efficiency.

Having progressed from supplying wooden frigates with cannon balls to supplying AEGIS destroyers with Tomahawk cruise missiles, the U.S. Navy Supply Corps continues to carry out its vital mission to keep our Navy well equipped and ready to respond at a moment's notice. I ask my colleagues to join me in congratulating the officers of the U.S. Navy Supply Corps on its 200th birthday.

RETIREMENT OF DONALD E. GESSAMAN

Mr. GLENN. Mr. President, I rise today to make a few comments concerning the retirement of Mr. Donald E. Gessaman of Dayton, OH.

Upon Mr. Gessaman's retirement, the Federal Government will lose one of its most effective public servants. Mr. Gessaman served as the Deputy Associate Director for National Security in the Office of Management and Budget. I would like to take this opportunity to commend Mr. Gessaman on 32 years of outstanding service to his country. He is known for exceptional intelligence, common sense, and good humor. Mr. President, his counsel and wisdom will be sorely missed.

Mr. Gessaman began his career in 1963 as an analyst for the Air Force space program. In 1966, he moved to Washington to become a management intern in the Office of the Secretary of Defense. The following year, he began his work at OMB and has remained there since, rising through the ranks and becoming a member of the Senior Executive Service. In 1990, he assumed his present position as Deputy Associate Director for National Security.

Mr. Gessaman dedicated his career to ensuring that the taxpayers' investment in our Nation's Armed Forces is well spent. The importance of national security issues and the spending constraints imposed by the deficit have made this a daunting task. Yet, time and time again, Mr. Gessaman has shown that judgment, analysis, and a thorough understanding of defense programs can serve both our national security and our economic security.

Mr. Gessaman's professionalism, his thorough analyses, and his commitment to the highest standards throughout his career have inspired his colleagues. I want to join those colleagues and his many friends in thanking Mr. Gessaman and wishing him all the best for the future.

TRIBUTE TO M.R. SENI PRAMOJ

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I rise to offer congratulations and best wishes to M.R. Seni Pramoj, one of America's great friends, and one of Asia's most accomplished democratic leaders, as his 90th birthday approaches.

And as we prepare to commemorate the 50th anniversary of the end of the Second World War, I would like to remind the Senate of Seni's great service as Thai Ambassador to the United States when the war began.

Seni Pramoj began his career in the 1930's, as one of Thailand's first legal scholars. During that decade, he helped to draft many of Thailand's modern laws, including the law abolishing the unequal treaties Thailand was forced to sign during the colonial era. He lectured to a generation of students at Thammasat School of Law, and before the end of the decade was made a judge on Thailand's Supreme Court.

These accomplishments gained him national recognition far beyond the legal field. And in 1940, at the young age of 35, Seni found himself appointed Ambassador to the United States.

A year and a half later, on the day of the surprise attack on Pearl Harbor, the Japanese Army entered Thailand. A powerful faction within the Thai Government, favoring collaboration, ordered the Thai military not to resist. And later in December, now in full control, they signed a military alliance with Japan.

Their next step was to order Seni by cable to deliver a formal Declaration of War to the U.S. Government. As a patriot and a man of conscience, Seni did not hesitate to do his duty as he saw it. As he recounts the story, he went to the State Department the day after receiving this cable, and told then-Secretary of State Cordell Hull:

Sir, I regret to say that I have been instructed by my government to declare war on the United States. But I refuse to do it because there is no reason, and I have already cut myself loose from Bangkok. I cannot bring myself to declare war on the United States.

Seni placed the Declaration of War in a safe at the Embassy on Kalorama Road, where it remained for the rest of the war. He refused further to leave the Embassy when the ruling faction in Bangkok ordered him to do so. And instead, he devoted himself to the Allied cause, writing every Thai student in the United States to announce his decision to form a resistance force called the Seri Thai or Free Thai movement.

Virtually all of the 110 Thai students in the United States at the time joined the Seri Thai. Seventy of them trained under the OSS as guerrilla fighters. Others served as technical experts. Some carried out broadcasts in the Thai language. Still others helped American military authorities to identify sites of great cultural and historical value to Thailand, in order to preserve them from Allied bombing raids toward the end of the war.

The Seri Thai movement was equally successful inside Thailand. Inspired by Seni's wartime broadcasts, and trained by his student recruits, it ultimately armed about 50,000 Thai partisans. And following the Japanese surrender, Seri Thai formed the first postwar government, with Seni himself as Prime Minister.

Seni's career since then has been just as distinguished. He was a founder of the Prachatipat or Democrat Party—now Thailand's oldest political party, and ably led by Prime Minister Chuan. He has been, as well, a highly successful lawyer and musician; and Prime Minister once again in the 1970's.

Altogether, it is no exaggeration to say that for the past 60 years, Seni has been at the center of Thai law and politics. And his sincere commitment to democracy, moderation, and the rule of law has helped Thailand become the prosperous democracy so many people around the world admire today.

In a letter to President Franklin Pierce, written in 1856 and reprinted in the book "A King of Siam Speaks," which Seni and his brother Kukrit Pramoj edited some years ago, King

Rama IV expressed the hope that the United States and Thailand would forever regard one another with "friendship and affection," and support one another in times of difficulty. And nearly 150 years later, few have done more to make the King's hope a reality than Seni Pramoj.

All American friends of Thailand join in wishing M.R. Seni Pramoj best wishes as his 90th birthday approaches. And we thank him for a service to both our countries which we will not forget.

IN HONOR OF FRANK E. RODGERS, RETIRING MAYOR OF HARRISON, NJ

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, on December 31, 1994, a very special man, Frank E. Rodgers, served his last day as mayor of Harrison. After 48 years of public service, Mayor Rodgers is being honored for his life-time commitment to the citizens of Harrison, NJ.

Mayor Frank Rodgers won his first term as mayor of Harrison after the war in 1946 and began the distinguished career that would make him the longest-serving mayor in the history of the United States. Epitomizing the old adage that all politics is local, Mayor Rodgers campaigned door-to-door all 24 times he sought reelection and maintained an open-door policy at town hall.

In addition to his time as mayor, Frank Rodgers held a variety of elected and appointed jobs in government, including 6 years from 1977 to 1983 as a State Senator and 10 years as a town councilman. Frank's service in the Army during World War II did not interfere with his commitment to public service; he was reelected as a councilman while in basic training at Fort Dix and managed town affairs through calls and letters to his wife and family while working as a military intelligence officer on assignment along the east coast.

Diligence, dedication, and a true commitment to his constituency were the hallmarks of Frank Rodgers' career. In his retirement letter to the residents of Harrison, Frank wrote, "I believe our years together hint at a mutual respect and caring that goes far beyond the requirements of governing." Frank Rodgers possessed both the insight to know what it means to govern and the willingness to devote himself wholeheartedly to the task. While his retirement will be a great loss to those who have worked with him and for those he has served, he has left an exemplary legacy of excellence in public service.

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Morning business is closed.

BALANCED BUDGET AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will now resume consideration of House Joint Resolution 1, which the clerk will report.

The bill clerk read as follows:

A joint resolution (H.J. Res. 1) proposing a balanced budget amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill.

Mr. DORGAN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, the Senate is now considering an amendment to the U.S. Constitution. This is not a usual matter and ought not be treated as such. Changing the U.S. Constitution is a very solemn responsibility, and those who wrote the Constitution made changing it very difficult, by design.

I have in my hand a copy of the Constitution. This is a little booklet put out by the bicentennial group that worked on a program to educate the American people about the Constitution. The Constitution begins, as all Americans know, "We the people of the United States." "We the people."

I was privileged to go to a celebration in Philadelphia about 8 years ago or so. It was the 200th birthday of the signing of the Constitution. The birthday, the 200th anniversary, was held in the very same room in Philadelphia, called "The Assembly Room," in Constitution Hall, the same room where the Constitution was written in the first place 200 years previous, when 55 white, largely overweight, men sat in a very hot Philadelphia room in the summer and wrote a constitution.

We know that because we know who they were. Two-hundred years later fifty-five people, men and women of all races went back into that room to recreate in celebration the writing of that Constitution. I was one who was picked to be among the 55. And to go into that room on the 200th anniversary of the date of the writing of this Constitution was pretty special. George Washington's chair is still at the front of the room, the chair he sat in when he was presiding, and Franklin sat over there.

It was very remarkable to be in this room where they wrote this Constitution. Even more remarkable was that it was written over 200 years ago by patriots, by people who cared deeply for this country, but also by a homogenous group of people, only white men who came from various parts of the colonies to join in that room and write this document.

We have come a long way. Two-hundred years later it was a diverse group of men and women of all races who celebrated. I sat there kind of getting some goose bumps about the history of it all. I thought: as a little boy I grew up studying about George Washington
